4. A VV MGB regiment numbered 1,200 to 1,300 men and a Pogran Otryad, 1,800 to 2,000 men. When the MGB troops were disbanded, its units were transferred to the MVD for the most part although some were transferred to the army. In 1953, there were about 25,000 men of the MGB and the Frontier Guards in the Lithuanian SSR, about 15,000 in the Latvian SSR, and about 10,000 in the Estonian SSR.

5. The stores supplied about 500 million rubles worth of goods annually. They were still in existence in 1957, and were apparently under the authority of the MVD.

6. The MVD Railroad Troops Division (Zhel. Dor. Divizia MVD) was disbanded in 1947 and in its place the 132nd MVD Escort Regiment (132 Konvoyny Polk MVD) was established. This regiment was still in existence in 1957 and was stationed on Ul. Basanavichus in Vilnius. Its members were primarily employed in the escorting of prisoners on long train journeys.
